Court rules Indiana inmate can pursue porn claim

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — An inmate can pursue his legal challenge to a Department of Correction policy preventing him from ordering or receiving pornographic materials depicting sexual penetra-tion, the Indiana Court of Appeals ruled Thursday.

The ruling said a Marion County judge wrongfully dismissed the lawsuit on grounds that his court lacked authority to review internal, administrative decisions of the prison agency.

The appeals court said a state law exempting certain DOC actions from judicial review does not include "alleged violations of constitutional rights, or in this case, statutory and constitutional rights. The lawsuit was filed by Jerry Montgomery, an inmate at the State Prison in Michigan City. He was convicted of murder in Lake County in 1986 and sentenced to 40 years. He said he was entitled to pornographic material based on a state law that says the DOC can inspect all printed matter and exclude any material that is contraband or prohibited property.

"However, in the case of a confined adult, the department may not exclude printed matter on the grounds that it is obscene or pornographic unless it is obscene under Indiana law," the law says.

Montgomery claims that under the statute, he is entitled to receive "penetration pornographic material" that does not run afoul of Indiana obscenity laws.

Prison system spokeswoman Pam Pattison said agency policy prohibits inmates from receiving sexually explicit material that poses a threat to the security or good order of the prison, and what Montgomery wants falls under that definition.

The appeals court said incarceration can include necessary limits on privileges and rights, but the state did not argue its case on those grounds. Instead, the attorney general's office sought dismissal of the lawsuit based on procedural and jurisdictional claims.

The court said it recognized the DOC's ability to restrict rights and privileges, and that Montgomery's fless than artful claims under the statute might evoke a visceral response.'

But because the state did not raise those arguments, it said it had no choice but to return the case to the trial court for further

illiam Dolan changed his name to Dowling and confused all sorts of people who have done research. There was the Dolan Theater and the Dowling Theater and many people considered them as two different owners. Most of the family retained the Dolan name and were buried under the Dolan name. William continued with Dowling after the change even in his obituary.

William Dolan was born in Leitrim, Ireland, on May 12, 1835. His mother died in 1851, and the family soon left Ireland and came to the United States. William first went to Hamilton, Ohio, and then to Fort Wayne. He booked passage on a canal boat and arrived in Logansport in 1852 when he was just 17. William immediately went to work as a ditch contractor. He worked at ditching to drain the swampy areas for the local farmers. He then worked on the new Eastern Railroad for a year as a check clerk. This life proved too calm so he bought a wagon and team and began hauling (for hire). He made a good living at this job and managed to save some money William decided to return to Ireland in 1861 and visit for a while. He returned to Logansport in 1862. William went into business with Patrick McHale. They ran a grocery and saloon on Market Street. One story that has been written about the family name change to Dolan in the first place was because a sign painter first changed the Dowling name to Dolan on the sign for the Dolan-McHale Grocery. At that time he decided that Dolan was a good short name. As soon as he had made enough money he built a large building at 422-26 South Third Street that was just west of the old depot. He located his saloon in the lower floor. Mr. Dolan then built another building at 305 Fourth Street. He was becoming quite well to do at William Dolan began plans to build an opera house in 1871 at the corner of Third and Broadway. The new Dolan Opera House opened to the public January 17, 1873. Many famous people graced the stage of the Dolan Opera House such as Eva Tanguy, Charles Gardner, Lillian Russell, James Whitcomb Riley, Mark Twain and nearly everyone else on the Vaudeville Circuit. The building at Third and Broadway was used for many other activities as there was a grocery store on the ground floor and apartments on the second floor. The third floor was the theater. In 1890, the apartments were torn out and the theater was enlarged. The area nearest the stage cost 75 cents, the gallery cost 25 cents, and the dress circle cost two or three dollars depending on the type of show.

In 1873, William was elected as director of the New Logan Banking Company located at 316 4th Street. He opened a wholesale liquor business at 305-307 South Third Street. William was elected to the Logansport school board on April 4, 1874. He resigned as director of the bank and bought the stock of the Pharos Newspaper.

The Pharos on September 3, 1874, stated that four ladies were put out of the opera house who were well known prostitutes. They refused to leave the premises so the police were called. A notice was placed in the paper that all improper characters would be denied admission to the opera house.

In 1876 Mr. Dolan purchased the Judge Dykeman interest in the Knowlton Dykeman Foundry. In 1890, he bought out the Knowlton interest and ran the factory himself. During this period of time he bought over 1,000 acres of farmland and owned 20 city lots in the business district.

Mr. Dolan was elected to the city council for two terms. It was stated that while William Dolan was on the Logansport City Council that he was the chief negotiator in purchasing the old Wabash and Erie Canal from the Shrik family estate in Peru. The result of that purchase is the present day Erie Avenue.

William Dolan married Anna McHale. They had eight children with John, Robert, Gertrude, Margaret, Mrs. Herman Dewenter and William who survived to adulthood. Some of the grandchildren were Maude Custer, Mrs. Thomas Bruner, Mrs. Harry Digman, Mrs. Louis Selegue and Mrs. Chester Arthur.

On April 13, 1911, Lew Wallace's "Ben Hur" came to the Dowling Opera House. There were 200 actors, a 20-piece orchestra, eight 60-foot baggage cars for costumes and two stock cars for horses and camels.

Mr. Dowling sold the opera house to Martin McHale and William Porter for $25,000 in 1903. The building burned to the ground on February 5, 1924. The opera house was not rebuilt as Vaudeville was ending and other forms of entertainment were becoming popular.

Mr. Dowling died July 23, 1903. Mrs. Dolan had died on January 6,

Auditors find Greensburg mayor broke law in accepting shotgun

GREENSBURG (AP) — State auditors have ruled that the mayor violated state conflict-ofinterest laws in accepting a shotgun from the president of the company that built the city's new police station.

The State Board of Accounts report found Mayor Gary Bailey acted inappropriately by accepting the gift, valued at almost $1,000, in December 2001 from Terry Burnworth.

Deputy State Examiner Marilyn Rudolph said the report had been sent to the Decatur County prosecutor without any recommendations.

"It will be up to him to decide what to do next," Rudolph told the Greensburg Daily News for a story Thursday. "We will send him a copy of our findings, but it's not up to us to remind him what his job is."

Bailey said he understood why the state auditors reprimanded him for not reporting the gift from Burnworth. His company, Pyramid Architecture/Engineering, built the new $2.5 million police building in the city about 40 miles southeast of Indianapolis.

"I should have made the connection. I just didn't," Bailey said. "The gun was given to me as Gary Bailey not as Mayor Bailey, and that's the way I viewed it. I never meant to hide anything or do anything wrong." County Prosecutor William O. Smith said he had not yet reviewed the state report to see whether he would take any action.

select maybe one, two or three prominent citizens for a committee and let them answer the questions that are posed in the "You Said It" column. I think that would be very, very interesting.

I hope all of you who voted for Chris Chocola are happy with him because he has not done what he said he was going to do. He has done everything opposite from what he ran for.

Regarding the proposed changes in the property maintenance ordinances. Now, you want to add a requirement that all interior surfaces be "in a good, clean and sanitary condition?" Yes, sir! What color, sir? If you school children have never learned about communism, just follow this issue. It promises to be a classic example.

I am incarcerated at the Cass County Jail, and I am not from this area but does this county allow special privileges such as trustee to convicted child molesters? Someone should contact the victim's families and have them contact the jail to put a stop to this nonsense.

Everyone has problems. Here is ours. We have a neighbor living in a house with no utilities. He has a generator for a little electricity. There is no bathroom or water so he urinates anyplace outside and has holes in the backyard for his "bathroom." Not even bashful about who sees him. He gets his water from our outside faucet even though he has been told "no." For three months, calls have been made to get help, but everyone passes the buck.

For gosh sakes! Someone please tell the employees in the classified department that an animal being spayed is s-p-a-y-e-d, not s-p-a-d-e!
