

MASSIVE PROBE IN GIRL'S DEATH

By Jack Hovelson
(Register Staff Writer)

WAVERLY, IA. — Some 18 investigating officers are putting in 16- to 18-hour days here in the hunt for the killer of 14-year-old Valerie Lynn Klossowsky of Waverly.

Agents of the State Bureau of Criminal Investigation (BCI), Bremer County sheriff's officers, and Waverly police by late Thursday had interrogated more than 100 persons and had visited some 100 homes in the Waverly area in the search for clues in the apparent sex slaying.

"No Conclusive Leads"

Despite the all-out effort, Bremer County Attorney Richard Kemming said Thursday that they had "no conclusive leads" and that no arrests were imminent.

"I'm not dismayed at this point," said the 29-year-old prosecutor. "If this were the situation a week from now, I might feel differently, but right now we're narrowing some things down."

The partially unclad body of Miss Klossowsky was found Tuesday morning under a gravel road bridge three miles west of Denver, Ia. It was lying on the bank of a small creek, about 12 feet beneath the bridge.

She was last seen about 9 p.m. Sunday in the vicinity of the Waverly swimming pool. The pool is in the south part of the city, less than a block west of U.S. Highway 218. The spot where the body was found is approximately 10 miles away.

Kemming, Bremer County Sheriff James Leemon and Waverly Police Chief Clarence Wickham called a press conference here Thursday to give a "progress report" on the investigation, and to appeal to citizens who might have information pertaining to the case to contact the county attorney's office in Waverly.

The law enforcement officials provided little in the way of new information on findings thus far in the investigation. Many of the questions from reporters couldn't be answered because "to do so would be strictly speculation," Kemming said.

The county attorney did say, however, that Miss Klossowsky sustained a fractured larynx when she was strangled.

The girl's grandmother, Mrs. Clarence Klossowsky, told The Register on Wednesday that Valerie was a "muscular very strong girl" and said that the person who killed her would have had to be "awfully strong or she would have fought him off."

Eighth Grade Student
Investigators list the girl's height at five-feet, six-inches, and her weight at 145 pounds. She was an eighth-grade student during the past school year.

Valerie lived with her divorced father, two sisters and grandmother in a large, well-kept two-story house in a quiet residential neighborhood less than two blocks off Bremer Avenue, Waverly's main street.

"We're treating this case as murder," Kemming said at the Thursday news conference.

He said that a pathologist's report from a Tuesday afternoon autopsy on the girl's body still had not been received by his office. Thus, he said, it still hasn't been positively determined if she was sexually assaulted before her death.

Only the girl's "upper garments" were on her body when it was found. They were pulled up around her shoulders.

Kemming acknowledged Thursday that tire marks were found at the scene where the body was found. Sheriff Leemon said it appeared that the body "may have been dropped off the bridge to the creek bank below."

Asked about reports that a "motorcycle gang" was in the Waverly area last weekend — and that Valerie was seen with one of its members — Kemming replied, "We have this information and we're following it up."

Private services for the girl, limited to members of the family, were conducted Thursday morning at a New Hampton funeral home.

Record Firm President: 'Rock Music Isn't Dying'

By Robert Hillburn
(1971 Los Angeles Times)

LOS ANGELES, CALIF. — Is rock dying? It's a question that has been asked ever since the first flurry of rock 'n' roll records appeared on the American Hit Parade in the mid-1950s when such figures as Elvis Presley, Little Richard, Jerry Lee Lewis and Chuck Berry helped reshape pop music.

Increasingly, in recent months, there has been a renewal of the issue. Some specific events have led to this latest round of debate: The deaths of Janis Joplin and Jimi Hendrix, the break-up of the Beatles, the announcement of Bill Graham that he is bowing out of the Fillmore East and West.

Different View

For many, these and other barometers add up to a "yes" answer to the rock-is-dying question. But Clive Davis, president of Columbia Records has a different view. In a statement widely circulated through the record industry trade press, Davis predicts a continuing emergence of bright new rock talent. He says the shape of pop music may be changing, but it is not dying.

Davis made his statement as a direct response to the "constant stream of predictions that the contemporary rock scene is losing its vitality."

"What is happening is that music is gradually changing — in structure, in sound, in creativity, in appeal. Its life force is flowing as strong as ever but it's touching on new and ever changing boundaries."

Individual Emerges

Davis says those record companies and others who tied themselves solely to the "group movement" in rock were unrealistic. "In the last three years, as the group syndrome developed and grew, the individual became submerged. Now, he or she is emerging again, and it's good for music and for its vast public."

"What is happening right now also is the emergence of the song, of the beautiful material that is the essence of music. New performers such as James
