Economy

Not all private analysts were as optimistic, with some saying that recent increases in interest rates will begin to take their toll in three to four months, cutting into consumer demand for such things as houses and automobiles. The report put GNP growth at an annual rate of $33.5 billion in the first quarter, with $21.4 billion of that growth coming from increased investment in inventories. Also showing major strength in the first quarter was consumer spending, which grew at an annual rate of 6.9 percent, compared with 6.5 percent in the final three months of last year. Housing construction grew at an annual rate of 25.7 percent, compared with a decline of 6.9 percent in the final quarter of 1983. Business investment grew at a 14.6 percent rate, a healthy increase but down from the 27.2 percent pace in the final three months of 1983. The country's trading picture continued to worsen with imports soaring at a rate of 53.7 percent in the first quarter, swamping a 7.4 percent rise in exports.

Body found near Montrose identified as Keokuk resident

KEOKUK, Iowa (AP) — The body of a man found near Montrose several days ago has been identified as that of 36-year-old Arthur Leon Ransford of Keokuk. Thomas Ruxlow, chief of the Iowa Division of Criminal Investigation, said positive identification of the body was made from fingerprints Friday morning. Ruxlow confirmed that Ransford died of a bullet wound in the head. Lee County authorities say Ransford's wife reported him missing on Thanksgiving Day 1983.

Reagan colon growth benign

WASHINGTON (AP) — A small growth was discovered in President Reagan's colon Friday, but an examination showed the polyp was non-cancerous and it was not removed, his spokesman said. Deputy White House press secretary Larry Speakes said the benign growth was discovered during the course of a general physical examination and had caused the 73-year-old president no discomfort. Speakes described the growth as "very small," about 16-hundredths of an inch in size and located about 16 inches inside the anal canal. Doctors have not decided whether to remove the polyp, a common disorder. Reagan left the hospital after his first physical in 2½ years and proceeded as scheduled to his Camp David retreat in the Maryland mountains where he and his wife Nancy were to spend the weekend. In a brief written statement issued five hours after Reagan's physical was completed, Speakes quoted Navy Capt. Walter Karney, the physician who led the team of doctors examining the president at Bethesda Naval Hospital, as saying Reagan was in "very exceptional physical condition" and that the results of the physical were "entirely normal." However, the spokesman said, the report was held up for several hours while a biopsy, a microscopic examination of tissue, was performed. That showed the polyp was benign and the president did not have a cancerous tumor, Speakes said. The growth was discovered in the course of a procto-sigmoidoscopy — an examination conducted by inserting a special instrument in the rectum. Speakes said part of the polyp was removed for biopsy during the course of the examination but that no anesthetic or further surgical procedure was required and that Reagan "suffered no ill effects" afterward. A polyp is a mass of fleshy tissue that grows from the mucous membrane of the colon or rectum. The common growths, which ordinarily increase in incidence with age, are of concern to doctors because they can become malignant.

If polyps prove to be cancerous they are immediately removed surgically and if they occur frequently in a patient, doctors sometimes must remove whole sections of the rectum or colon to prevent recurrence. "Polyps are a very normal occurrence," Speakes said after being briefed by Reagan's doctors. Speakes said Reagan was told at the time of the examination that doctors had found the polyp and that it "appeared to be benign." About five hours later, when the biopsy had been completed, assistant presidential physician Eric K. Louie, who had accompanied the Reagans to Camp David, informed him by telephone of the laboratory finding, the spokesman said. It is standard procedure for a physician to accompany the president on all trips outside the White House. The physical exam turned up no other abnormalities, Speakes said. It consisted of a battery of tests, some of them conducted at the White House during the past two weeks.

Teen 'friendly right up to the end'

By Roger Munns
Associated Press
DES MOINES — The 17-year-old boy who killed a girl acquaintance in a school hallway and then turned the gun on himself was described Friday as a wholesome, busy lad who was "smiling and being friendly right up to the end."

A friend of the family of Todd Dunahoo said the murder-suicide left the boy's mother in "intense devastation." The boy's great-uncle said he grieved for the parents of the girl, 16-year-old Valerie Rockafellow, of Altoona, an honor student at Runnells Southeast Polk High School. Meanwhile, authorities said they discovered that Dunahoo, also of Altoona, bought both the .38-caliber revolver used in the killing plus a .25-caliber handgun found later in his pocket. They were purchased from individuals in Polk County who have been interviewed by police. The information will be turned over to the Polk County attorney. The sellers face simple misdemeanor charges for providing handguns to someone under age 21. The charge carries a maximum $100 fine or a month in jail. A county prosecutor added that the case demonstrates how people, especially youngsters, are unprepared to handle rejection. Witnesses said both students were in a French class about noon Thursday. Rockafellow was taking a test in the hallway when Dunahoo asked to be excused. He walked down the hall, turned back and fired three bullets, striking Rockafellow twice in the heart and once in the shoulder.

He then fired a single shot in his head. Both died within hours. The shooting numbed students and faculty members at the high school and classes were dismissed for the day. Classes resumed Friday and school officials said students were subdued and often talked about the shooting. No special service will be held at the school, officials said. Dunahoo was the son of Kermit Dunahoo, a lawyer and former assistant Polk County attorney, and of Carol Dunahoo. Both parents declined comment. They are divorced and the boy lived with his mother. A man answering the telephone at Mrs. Dunahoo's house Friday said the shooting puzzled the family. "Of all the children in the world, you would never expect this of him," said the man, who said he was a family friend but declined to be identified. He said the boy worked part-time on the weekends, was respectful and "didn't drink, smoke and didn't even swear." He said there was apparently a friendship of some sort between Rockafellow and young Dunahoo. The girl's parents said Thursday their daughter and Dunahoo were not going steady. Rockafellow was a junior but had earned enough credits to graduate this Sunday. Investigators said some information indicated the boy was upset that their relationship was about to break up. The man said the family is astounded that Todd had guns. "That's the mystery of the thing," he said. "I feel so bad for the girl's parents," said Guy Dunahoo, Des Moines, Todd's great-uncle. He admitted anger toward Todd. "I feel like if you want to die, go ahead. But don't take somebody else with you. It would have been a lot better if he'd gone and run into a bridge abutment and they could call it an accident," he said. Guy Dunahoo said Todd's family was not close to the rest of the Dunahoo family. Ron Wheeler, assistant Polk County Attorney, said the case is all too typical. "If there is something to be learned here," he said, "it's that (breaking up) is an area of human behavior that we don't handle very well." He estimated that 30 percent of the homicides and a large percentage of other crimes follow directly in the wake of an emotional attachment gone wrong. Perhaps, he said, youngsters should be taught to be more prepared for emotional let-downs.

Branstad pledges farm funds

DES MOINES (AP) — Gov. Terry Branstad said Friday he will sign a measure providing $200,000 for credit counseling for financially pressed farmers and that he wants to take a delegation to Washington to push for more farm aid. "I'm going to be signing an appropriation to provide through the extension service $200,000 to provide financial counseling for people who are faced with credit problems," Branstad said.

That measure, approved by lawmakers this year, sets up a counseling network through the extension service and also links into a statewide computer network aimed at finding ways of solving financial problems facing farmers. Branstad made his remarks at an airport news conference in Des Moines as he returned from a Denver "summit" meeting of agriculture-state governors on farm credit problems.

Farm accident kills Iowa man

NEW HAMPTON, Iowa — Paul E. Man dies in fall

DUBUQUE (AP) — Thomas Sharkey, 38, was killed Friday in an accident at the W.C. Brown Publishing Company in Dubuque, police said. Authorities said Sharkey, who was a construction worker for Mid America Erector of Kieler, Wis., died Friday morning as a result of injuries suffered when he fell about 40 feet off the roof. He had apparently been cutting a hole for a skylight. Dubuque County Medical Examiner said Sharkey died from severe head injuries.

Woman hospitalized after 2-car accident

Joyce Burkle, 27, of Route 2, Central City, was hospitalized in fair condition at Cedar Rapids Mercy Hospital last night following a two-car collision west of Central City at 5:30 p.m. Friday. Burkle was hospitalized for observation of internal injuries suffered when her car was struck broadside by a car driven by Linda Sayre, 38, of Iowa City, in the intersection of county roads E-16 and W-58, according to a Linn County sheriff's report. Deputies said Sayre went through a stop sign while northbound on W-58 and her car struck the eastbound Burkle vehicle. Sayre, who was treated and released at Mercy Hospital, was charged with failing to stop at a stop sign.
