Arts Meet Hails

praised Friday by recreation officials participating in the first formal panel presentation of the Tri-State Conference on the Arts at the Waterloo Arts and Recreation Center.

Representatives of recreation and arts grams from three states are in Waterloo this weekend to explore ways of expanding and vitalizing arts activities in parks and recreation programs.

Norman Kaderlan, moderator of a panel presentation entitled "Exciting Potentials for the Arts in Parks and Recreation" labeled Waterloo as a leader in combining both the arts and traditional recrational activities.

KADERLAN, supervisor for the performing arts section in the Department of Environmental Affairs in Arlington, Va., said that the idea of combining arts and traditional recration activities is only. now "catching on" around the country.

The Virgina resident stressed that it was important to broaden the concept of recreation.

"Recreation," he said, "is the realization that there is something other than earning money." The important element in recreation, he noted is that the individual become involved in a form of self expression. Panel member Jane Henzi.
